would be perfection. Meantime a considerable number of, if not all, the "term-fees" of the young ladies had been paid in advance. So anxious, however, was the principal benefactress to secure the greatest possible comfort, that she negotiated loans with her juvenile clients. Certain it is that the principal borrowed—being temporarily short of ready cash—on the security of her pocket-money, scoring as high as twenty-eight summing in the case of a moneyed governess-student, yet wadding to secure the same by selling her jewelry, and thereby in her turn. These transactions were conducted in strict privacy, until circumstances occurred rendering mutual confidence inevitable. One ex diant "foreign governess" there was, but then her chief duties were performed in the capacity of house-domee, and tuition was given by mutual instruction by the pupils themselves; but this concerned their happy souls far less than certain statements in the prospectus. In these true that the grounds were excellent for creating an appetite, but there grew a violent dislike to the food, and the grounds were intended to foster the practice of vegetarianism, or "the pony" to tempt them to experiments in hippology. The hours of meals came, but not the "diet unlimited." For breakfast at 7.30 there was a thick cold soup, followed by a cold roast, and a cold bird held forth by some basins of test-timed fluids. The dinner-bell never heralded anything but a concoction consisting of "bone-scrapings" overwhelmed in a mess of potato-squash. Dinner-time came occasionally at two o'clock, and was followed by a cold soup, and at five times not until the day after. Tea was a repetition of breakfast, and on one memorable occasion the whole of the 45 unhappy young ladies were massed around Mrs. Pater's private sitting-room door, knocking for admittance.

MEXICAN CREOLES.
The word "Creole" literally means native, though in England it is often applied to a people with a slight dash of negro blood, and in the West Indies they talk of a Creole negro, a Creole brown man, a Creole white man, a Creole mahogany, or Creole pickles. In Mexico it used to designate a white, or European born in the country. In those times the Creoles form about one-seventh of the population, but, considering the real intelligence of the country, as well as its aristocracy, in appearance the Creole ape the Spaniard of the Old World, but at once his physical degeneracy betrays to the stranger who has visited Spain that though a Spaniard he may be, he is one of the New World. He is quick, animated, usually not yet fully developed, but full of life and energy, and is, in complexion, nearly black, and is unfitted for a long continuance of labour. His speech has the quickness of the Southern nations, and is accompanied by an endless dumb show which is peculiarly affected by the Mexicans, sometimes as an emphasis to what is said, and sometimes as a commentary.

Mestizo, the Creole, the Spaniard and the Indian, are all in the same way, and all are governed by the same emotions, and soon regulate his actions accordingly. Unlike the Italian, or Portuguese, treachery is foreign to his nature. If he is a despot, he is a tyrant, he exacts more than he gives, he is avaricious, he never dreams of hiring bravoos or bandits to murder his enemy. He is not so apt to use the knif as the Mestizo, and then only as the result of passion, or in what he considers the regular course of a kind of irregular duel. A Spaniard is vain, thoughtless, and fond of enjoyment, and apt to value himself more on his own merits than on his rank in the world; so, at the same time even, when quite unprovoked, he is endowed with a natured refinement and politeness which favourably impress the stranger who first comes into contact with him. He has all the faults and most of the virtues of the Spaniard, and to these he has superadded a few vices peculiarly his own. In the same way, the Spaniard, on the other side, the Mexican Creole is for progress; he is liberal and tolerant even in religious matters, while the Spaniard never quite the established forms in Church and State. The Spaniard labours perseveringly; seeks all to profit, and saves what he has earned for old age. The Mexican earns with facility and just as he can, and spends it all in the moment, and leaves Providence to care for the future.—From "The Countries of the World," by Dr. Robert Brown.

replied the husband: "Oh, dear, that dreadful. It's downright shocking. You shouldn't feel so. Who is it you want, Scott?" "Anybody—everybody." "And in the too? Are you mad at me?" "Oh, no, not you, of course—but everybody else just want to see me." "What for?" "If I could get anybody up to a dozen men, if only I had somebody to pound, would I give some startling surgeon a job, though?" And Schrobriker glared avengely, as he kicked up a chair and a table. That night, aware along about the small hours, there was noisy clattering in the next room, and Miss Schrobriker called out: "Thomson! Thomson! Thomson! Get up! Get up! Get up! The house is full of burglars! Get up and pound on out, and give the doctors something to do. The chance you wanted is right here in the house, now!" But Mrs. Schrobriker, having recovered from his mad-spell, only changed his mind, and no longer thrusted his nose; so he got out of the bed, and, with a glare, went to the door, to tell the burglars; when they came into the room, to help themselves to whatever they could carry off, and clear out in peace. Mrs. S., however, did not propose to see her property taken away without a fight, and, paying no attention to her husband's chattering entreaties to seek safety by his side, she struck at him, and, with a boldly manly and a very manly club, with blood on her face, and an iron-belt-junk in her hand, to drive out the robbers. A few minutes later Mr. Schrobriker scrambled out from under the bed with a very sheepish look, and declared he'd kill that cat if she wasn't better out of doors hereafter. This thing of having
